Mayna	Fabric store	This fabric store represents one of my identities, that is, a practitioner in the fashion industry. Not only does it carry memories of when I was studying fashion design in London, but every time I pass by it now, it reminds me of the days when I worked day and night for my fashion career in Beijing (my hometown).
Nini	Uniqlo	On the one hand, Uniqlo is a Japanese fast-moving consumer goods brand, and Japan is where I was born. Uniqlo, on the other hand, has stores all over the world and is especially popular in my hometown in China. Every time I pass Uniqlo in London, it reminds me of my complicated cultural identity, and it also reminds me of my family in China and Japan and the days I spent with them.
Yan	Bar Termini	This is an Italian bar located in Soho. Passing by it reminds me of my cultural identity because the street in Soho is very similar to Soho in Hong Kong where I used to go. At the same time, the espresso martini in the bar reminds me of my favorite drink when I was working hard. The hard-working self.
Anitasia	Korean Restaurent	I'm a K-pop fan, so the music, the language spoken, and the food in Korean restaurants are all what I like and pursue.
